

Claudia Warner-Romano is a Knowledge Management Lawyer in Hicks Morley's Toronto office. She enhances collaboration and knowledge sharing at the firm by ensuring its intellectual capital is captured through a collection of precedents and practice group resources.

Claudia works with the firm's practice and industry groups to continuously improve the way that Hicks Morley delivers its services and to leverage existing work products. This includes developing best practices, ensuring efficiencies and creating knowledge resources, both internally and for the firm's clients. She also routinely monitors legislative and case law developments and provides timely updates to both Hicks Morley lawyers and clients on issues of significance.

Claudia received her Juris Doctor from Western University. While studying at Western, she served as an executive member of the Labour and Employment Law Society, as well as Program Manager at Sport Solution, a clinic that advocates on behalf of Canada's high performance athletes. Before attending law school, Claudia most recently completed a Master of Library and Information Science from the University of Toronto and worked as an information specialist in the healthcare sector. Claudia joined Hicks Morley after articling with the firm.
