

Craig Rix is Hicks Morley's Managing Partner and is a labour and employment lawyer in the firm's Toronto office. Craig's practice is dedicated to change management, collective bargaining negotiations and rights arbitration advocacy in both the public and private sectors.

Craig is an advocate, negotiator, relationship-builder and problem-solver. Applying a broad skill base forged through experience at the bargaining table, the boardroom table and an early career leave as a senior advisor to the provincial government, Craig has developed the ability to help his clients creatively solve a number of complex legal and human resources problems.
