

Ian Dick is a senior litigator in Hicks Morley's Toronto office. He represents private and public sector clients before all levels of court and various regulatory tribunals.

Ian's experience includes acting on several of the longer civil trials held in Ontario over the last ten years. He has particular experience in dealing with judicial reviews and administrative law, pension litigation, appellate advocacy, employment law, class actions, injunctions, insolvency and restructurings and government and regulatory liability. He regularly advises clients with respect to various employment issues, including executive terminations and employment-related fraud and theft.

Ian is the former chair of Hicks Morley's Litigation practice group, as well as a member of The Advocates' Society.
