An all-in-one overview of the legal framework for special education in Ontario

Since the first edition of An Educator's Guide to Special Education was published in 2001, many significant changes in education law have occurred that are important for an educator to understand to ensure that special education programmes are properly delivered.

An essential reference work for every educator

The second edition provides the same excellent, comprehensive information contained in the first edition, but also details changes to the Ontario Human Rights Code and the Education Act and how the changes impact upon educators. It updates case law generated by the courts, the Special Education Tribunal and the Human Rights Tribunal on special education issues.

New chapters include:

- disciplining students with special needs
- the role of parent advocates
- the accommodation of students with special needs at the post-secondary level

A complete and comprehensive account

Written clearly and comprehensively, this guide sets out the legal framework with practical advice and is for use on a daily basis to help educators navigate this highly technical and challenging area of education law.

It delivers:

- legal principles
- relevant case law
- a critical guide to navigating the legal processes

The only book to examine the law in such an in-depth fashion

This indispensable resource covers practically every subject, including:

- the creation and maintenance of the Special Education Plan
- the role of the Special Education Advisory Committee
- the identification, placement and appeal process

The legal obligations of educators and the legal context in which special education is delivered is examined including:

- an outline of the administrative scheme under which special education is delivered (including the new standards for special education plans)
- the Individual Education Plan (IEP)
- the role of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Ontario Human Rights Code
- a brief summary of the decisions that impact upon special education
- the legal process set out in the Education Act for the delivery of special education

The Authors

Brenda Bowly is a partner in the law firm of Hicks Morley LLP and has been practising education, human rights and employment law since she joined the firm in 1981. Ms. Bowly regularly represents school boards and colleges on human rights issues in various venues, including arbitrations, the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario, the Special Education Tribunal and the courts. She was counsel for the school board in Eaton v. Brant County Board of Education, from the Special Education Tribunal up to the Supreme Court of Canada. Ms. Bowly is a frequent speaker at conferences and has written numerous articles on human rights and special education issues. She is also the co-author of An Educator's Guide to Human Rights, Second Edition, published by Canada Law Book.

Catherine Peters is a partner in the law firm of Hicks Morley LLP. She provides strategic advice to clients (including school boards and post-secondary educational institutions) on a wide variety of human rights, employment law, labour relations and administrative law matters and represents those clients in proceedings before the Human Rights Tribunal of Ontario, arbitration boards, other administrative tribunals, and the courts. Ms. Peters is a frequent conference presenter and has authored a number of publications on human rights topics of interest to school boards and post-secondary institutions including special education and accommodation of students with disabilities.

Martha Mackinnon is a lawyer and the Executive Director of Justice for Children and Youth, an Ontario legal clinic, where she practises education law, human rights, youth criminal justice and other areas of law affecting youth. Ms. Mackinnon taught secondary school in Ontario for eight years before earning her LL.B. from the University of Toronto. She was in-house counsel to a school board for seven years and has presented nationally on education law topics.
